Guest	Dr. Behar-Horenstein Discussion of self-assessment and self-directed learning for Standard 2-10	Dr. Behar-Horenstein was invited by the Curriculum Committee to discuss self-assessment and self-directed learning. A learner sets his or her own agenda. They set up their own goals, learning strategies and assessment. They do not work in isolation and will consult colleagues and faculty. They are self-motivated and determine what needs to be done and how they will assess completion. It is not studying for a test, thesis, or dissertation. There are student inclinations that predispose these learners to seek self-directed learning. You have to have metacognitive strategies and be highly motivated, self-regulated and identify what you need to ask and seek. Examples of where this may exist would be a research topic or independent study. Dr. Culp summarized the intent of the standard was to produce students that have the tools to be able to learn on their own with appropriate resources after graduation. Dr. Bhattacharyya said that we should be able to reference courses that have EBD teaching methods as evidence of this standard.
